Red-throated diver													NOTES
Black-throated diver													NOTES
_ittle grebe
Great crested grebe
Slavonian grebe													The attached table shows 'sensitive' time periods, equating to the beginning
Black-necked grebe													and end of a bird's breeding season in Scotland. The start of the breeding
-ulmar													season is defined here as the approximate earliest start date for territory/nest
Manx shearwater													site establishment and egg laying, and end of the breeding season is defined
European storm petrel			1										by the end of chick rearing to fledging. There will be some inter-annual _each's storm petrel			1										variability in timings and the dates provided here will not always represent
Gannet													(and therefore include) extremes of variability. The dates are divided into two
Cormorant													week blocks so that reach month is composed of two, two-week blocks of Shag													time. This is to cover latitudinal and longitudinal variation across Scotland.
Heron													The data were pulled together by Phil Whitfield and Rhys Bullman in SNH
Mute swan													and taken from various sources including Birds of the Western Palaearctic
Greylag goose													(BWP), but modified as appropriate, based on knowledge and experience of
